BATTING ORDER.
NEW YORK
Boston, Sept. 15. (Special.)—The Boston Americans and the New York Highlanders played before an immense gathering of fans. Both teams were on edge.

In the police theory as to the murder, the nurse and surgeon at the Ramsey Hospital think that George Crawford, found unconscious in Hyde park by a man from the Church of the Most Precious Blood, is a victim of foul play. The police of Hyde park insist that Crawford had been killed by falling down the steps while under the influence of the nurse, who was charged with his care. It is also possible that Crawford was killed by a man from the Church of the Most Precious Blood, who was charged with his care. It is also possible that Crawford was killed by a man from the Church of the Most Precious Blood, who was charged with his care.

Despondent over his losses in United States Steel common stock, Frank Perkins, forty-seven years old, one of the managers of the Boston Entertainment Bureau, committed suicide early to-day by hanging himself to a hinge on the door of his private office, room No. 712, Tremont Temple.

The body was found by one of the cleaners of the building. Mr. Perkins had been dead several hours. The body was cut down and a physician summoned.

The top of the hinge to which the body was hanging by a piece of rope four feet long was six feet five inches from the floor. There was no chair nor other article upon which Mr. Perkins could have stood to adjust the rope. It is the theory of the police and Mr. Perkins's business associates that Mr. Perkins, who was six feet tall, adjusted the rope about his neck and then, gripping the door casing, drew himself up by one hand and slipped the rope over the hinge.

Mr. Perkins was married but had no children. He married at No. 209 West Springfield street. His wife was notified to-day of his suicide and at once hurried to the building. She was almost prostrated and wept bitterly as she spoke of her husband.

PERKINS SEEMED GLOOMY.

Mr. Perkins, who is believed to have been the last of his friends to see him alive, told a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter to-day: "Yesterday afternoon Perkins seemed gloomy, and said to me: 'I sold out my steel stock last night. Give me a paper, I want to see if I have gone up.'"

Crowd Arrives Early. The rush came early, as the gates were open at the noon hour that the regular season was disappointed in getting to their accustomed locations. The atmosphere bristled with the prospect of the electrical exhibition that was to be put on the stage, and the fans were feeling over the result kept the throat of a concert which from beginning to the end of the season was never interrupted on the one hand and the other hand.

scientific, and which the authorities of the two States are working to find out. It is found that in the first degree in Massachusetts Allingham would be executed, but if convicted in Rhode Island he would escape his death penalty.

Allingham's confession was made at the Pawtucket Police Station to Chief of Police Randall H. Rice, Captain Vincent and Detective Thomas Henry, after they had arrested him at what is now his home in the home run by the father of the case.

Crimes, writing and reading, with his nose from slaying as found from again. Allingham told his confession. When he was questioned with the back of the dirty hand, he made his statement in a trembling voice, though he was sufficiently aware to make sure that it became official, knowing that the murder was committed in Rhode Island.

Allingham admitted to Chief of Police that he knew the State law in Massachusetts and Rhode Island, and was diagnosed through the house of the Widow Crowley. He declared that the first blow was struck in the woman's bedroom, and that after the second blow Mrs. Crowley ran from the house, and while running he struck her again with the club, but he denied absolutely that he ever struck the woman after she found the State law, which she was found in the house in Massachusetts.

Confession Complicates Case.

Allingham's confession that the death blow was delivered in Rhode Island makes the present situation more complex than it was previous to his confession.

ALLINGHAM SAYS HE SLEW MRS. CROWLEY WITH CLUB

BY JOHN ALLINGHAM.

I had been at Mrs. Crowley's house for three days. We were on good terms until day yesterday, when she began to pick at me.

Yesterday morning, when I came up from the cellar to get my breakfast, she threw a cup of tea in my face, ordering me, at the same time, to leave the house.

I told her I would not leave until I got good and ready. Then she grabbed my meat off my plate and threw it to a cur dog that sat in front of the stove. As she did this she darted into her own room.

I was mad and I grabbed a hickory club and went after her. I found her lying on the bed, and gave her a rap over the head. She jumped up and grabbed the club and almost got it away from me.

I pushed her back on the bed and struck her with all my strength over the head. She ran screaming from the house, and I saw her fall about ten yards away on the path.

I never used any axe. There was no use for it. She was all in after I hit her the last time. If she had gotten the club away from me she would have killed me.

I never stepped from the house during the whole time the fight was on, and I know that every blow struck was delivered in Rhode Island.

After the fight I threw the club under the bed and then went out to the wood shed and drank the balance of a jug of whiskey. That was how I came to be drunk when the police arrested me.

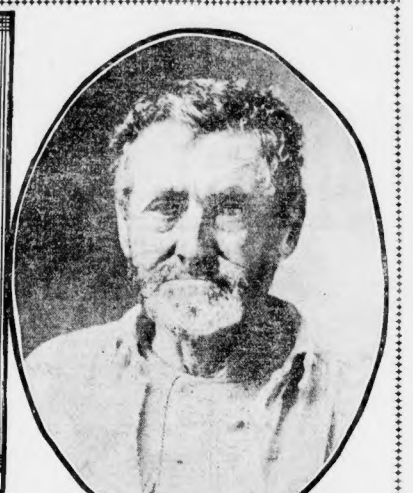

In the house, which is in Rhode Island, but the State of Massachusetts, and was called by the Rhode Island authorities as the "Death Valley" murder.
